

ERP for Project Based Organizations

Transform your business

Organizations that deliver projects work on long project timelines. The projects are made to order and usually non-repetitive. The business model of such organizations is different from those of manufacturing firms. Hence, their business process and activity controlling parameters also differ from normal business processes. It is not possible to fit these activities into a standard ERP without making necessary changes to it.

A critical element of project based delivery is long time line of a project, which may last for months or sometimes years. Thus, each project needs efficient tracking mechanism for procurement, inventory and material movement during the course of the project. Keeping track of material across multiple project sites and material transfers between locations are also key pain areas. Human resource management takes care of allocation of manpower for different projects and also provide facility for employees to fill time sheets. This helps the organization track human resource cost.

Project based firms don't manufacture the same product continuously. A company can have manufacturing facility for some simple stock items, while some may be bought-out.

Some items may be manufactured or processed through subcontracting. Activities such as assembling or erection of different structure are on-site and require proper tracking by the system. Tracking all these activities in all the departments across the enterprise over a period of time is a serious concern.

Thus arises the need for an ERP that addresses the issues precisely that concern project based organizations.
